

DEDICATED TO THE PROMOTION OF TOWNS COUNTY

OPINIONS & COMMENTARY

Hiwassee (A-ya-wa-se)

Spring time came to the mountains And the Great Spirit was redoing all The Cherokee gathered in their village They were listening to their chief's recall.
They came from the far North, he said One of the five civilized tribal bands Marching south to the Blue Ridges Led by the Great Spirit to new lands.
The Chief recalled how they came How they named all the new places Then carved legends and tracks on rocks Telling of animals with new faces.
They thought highly of the deer That provided so much for the tribe Food, clothing andoccasins to be many Beyond the chief's ability to describe.
Now the chief's wife was to deliver So all were waiting for the day And the time was fast approaching Finally a girl was born the Indian way.
The mother looked upon her baby girl And her whole body gave a shiver.
She was to become a special person As her namesake would deliver.
She had lovely dark brown eyes And her hair was as black as coal When she smiled, which was often, Everyone could feel it in their soul.
She was named for the young deer A spotted little fawn so neat That traipsed through the forest at play And to see her was a special treat.
The chief being so very proud Called all to his daughter, to see For he knew many braves one day Would want to marry A-ya-wa-se.
She studied very hard and soon All seven clans were in her memory clear However the principle one she thought Was her own Clan of the Deer.
Thus she became a beautiful maiden Loved by the whole Cherokee Nation To honor her they named many things This to them was a great elation.
A-ya-wa-se became known near and far All the braves wanted her hand To move her totem to their family And increase the spirit of their clan.
When the pioneers arrived they found Many rivers, streams and Indian towns And most with Indian names already So they adapted them within bounds.
And now as we look about when we travel We see HIWASSEE every where we go It's all because of a young Indian maiden Who lived so many long years ago.

The Middle Path

by Don Perry

"I awake and find myself lonely in the vast world. After many an inebriating farewell cup, I come to my senses. The slanting moon on the wax is shaped like a crescent." -Hô Xuân Hương

I have always liked the idea of the twelve days of Christmas. I am reluctant to take down the Christmas tree and all the decorations so painstakingly arranged, preferring to leave them up and glittering at least until Epiphany. Driving around my old neighborhood in the suburbs of Gainesville last night and enjoying the decorations still visible, I was happy to find that quite a few people seem to share the same reluctance. A perfectly green and functional Christmas tree tossed to the curb, to me is a sad sight, all the expectation and joy once surrounding the icon of our holiday season, now headed for the land fill.

Our time on this earth is so fleeting, the older I get, the more I rage against the machine we have created which seems to require that the vast majority of our waking moments be consumed by the grueling pursuit of digits to pay for widgets. Our celebrations and moments of vacation and renewal are few and far between in comparison to our hours of work and worry, not to mention the commute in between. Our moments of rest are disturbed by the constant background noise of information and drama. Ancient societies that we now consider "primitive" worked far fewer hours than their more sophisticated descendants.

What is it that drives us to press our flesh to the grindstone as it strips away the days of our lives in efforts which, now more than ever, enrich the few while barely sustaining the many?
Perhaps it is the very real fear of finding ourselves adrift in a society which has replaced the cultural obligation of caring for the poor, the sick and the elderly with an institutional, governmental substitute that is more effective at making insurance and drug companies profitable than it is in providing quality care.

Perhaps it is the ascendancy of the competition paradigm. Millions of Chinese people work like insects, flogged by fears of failing to compete with the Americans.
Their party bosses grow rich in the same way as our own corporate masters. Americans

GUEST COLUMNS

From time to time, people in the community have a grand slant on an issue that would make a great guest editorial.
Those who feel they have an issue of great importance should call our editor and talk with him about the idea. Others have a strong opinion after reading one of the many columns that appear throughout the paper.
If so, please write. Please are told that older cultures not ours, not so intent on world domination, which work fewer hours, take more holidays, longer lunches, more breaks - and retire at a younger age - are corrupt, are decadent. Yet these "inferior" people live longer than we do and they suffer from less heart disease and cancer during their longer life spans.

All too soon my own work week will begin again.
I am grateful, as I have been instructed to be, as millions of Americans who have seen their benefits diminish or disappear and who have not received a raise in years, have been instructed to be, that I still have a job in this economy. What can one person do against a planetary paradigm anyhow?

I'll tell you what one person can do. One can choose not to participate in the seductions of a consumer culture which serve to further enslave.
I can refuse to borrow money to pay for things I do not need but have been conditioned to want. I can learn to want what I already have. I can find pleasure in the myriad facets of life in a magical and remarkable world that does not depend on this thin veneer of human activity for its magic and remark-ability. I can learn to spend less than I earn and to save and invest wisely and dispassionately. I can leave my Christmas tree up until spring if I want to.

A little Heaven in 2011

Are you dissatisfied with your life? Do you feel that your life is filled with discord? Well, we have been blest with a new year and by God's grace we are able to change life's direction and enjoy some heaven while still on earth. But to do this we must honestly evaluate just who we are, what we are, and who we want to be and how to get there. John Stewart Mill's whole life was changed when he asked himself this question: "Suppose I attain what I am now pursuing, what sort of man shall I be at the end?" A probing question indeed and one that needs to be asked by each of us. The mightiest works of history have been wrought by men and women who had in themselves a divine dissatisfaction. Browning believed that a divine dissatisfaction, when properly harnessed, would keep us ever moving to something better when he said, "A man's reach should exceed his grasp, else what's a heaven for?" To settle for the "same old, same old" habits of life will turn your spirit gray before your hairs.
It was the Wright brothers who believed that airplanes would one day be beneficial to mankind. (A man named Marshall Foch said in 1911, that airplanes were nice toys but had no military value.) Horace Rachman said in 1903 that the automobile was only a fad, but Henry Ford believed it would be future transportation. Darryl F. Zanuck said in 1946 that television would lose the market after six months.

Kenneth Olsen said in 1977 that there was no reason for anyone to have a computer, but years before, Alexander Graham Bell was dissatisfied with communication and look what he put into motion! As we begin this New Year do you have any plans to bring about any positive changes in your life? All of us should. In fact, if our world improves at all in this coming year then I must improve and you must improve. It is true that the biggest room in this old world is the room for improvement. If we experience a little heaven in 2011 and help others to do so, we need to be touched by and be in touch with the Master. Then we can sing with the poet "All my life was wrecked by sin and strife, discord filled my heart with pain. Jesus swept across the broken strings, stirred the slumbering chords again.
Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, sweetest name I know, fills my every longing, keeps me singing as I go" (Luther B.
Bridgers).

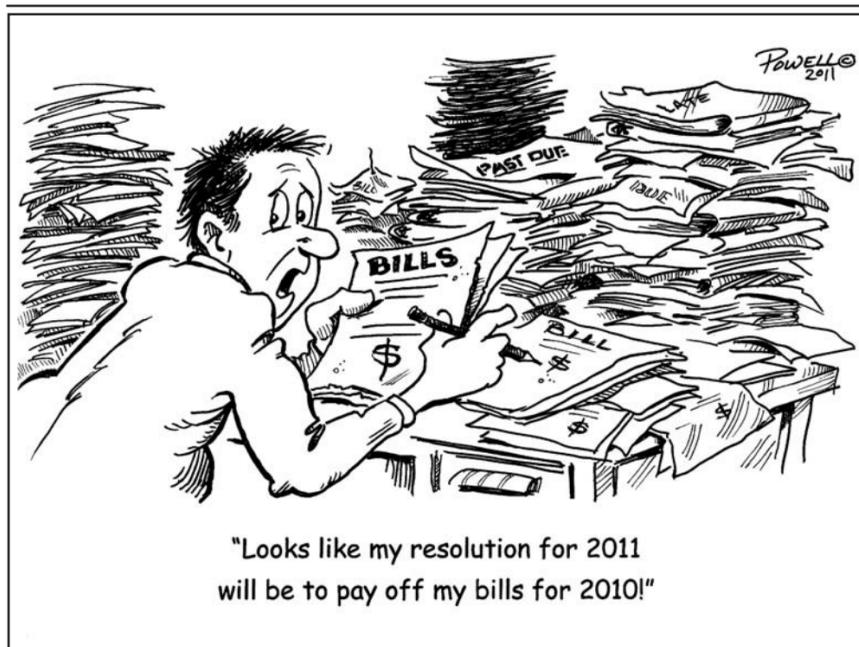

RARE KIDS; WELL DONE

By Don Jacobsen

Q: Dr. Don, I worry a lot about the kids my children hang out with. I don't like their music and I don't like their language. Also, I don't much like the way they dress. Can you give me some ideas about what to do?
A: I'll try. A lot of parents tell me they are concerned about their kids' peers. Fact is, as parents we don't have a lot of options here. We can tell our kids who we want them to choose for friends, but it's almost impossible to enforce it.
But let me give you some courage. First, your parenting well will give you a far greater influence on the character and values of your kids than their peers will ever have. Second, peer influence is of surprisingly short duration. It is felt most keenly during middle school; that's why I talk so fervently about building values into our kids during that third-to-thirteenth-birthday move. By the time our kids move into their teens we need to have helped them become joyously comfortable with what our family deems valuable.
Third, kids tend to be drawn toward peers most like themselves. That means we tend to be most comfortable with those with whom we have the most in common. Remember Mom's statement, "Birds of a feather..." Seldom does the youngster from a healthy, happy home suddenly sprint into the alley and run off with a drug-addicted motorcycle gang.

One more suggestion: Invite that peer group over to your house as often as possible.
Get acquainted. Rent a video.
Order in pizza. Shoot hoops in the driveway. Let some of your rub off on them. Baffle your kids with your consistent joy.
Distinguish between what you don't like (their music?) and what could be hurtful. Bite your lip about what you don't like; wisely coach them around the other stuff.
Will your kids be influenced by some blue-haired, multi-pierced specimen that doesn't shower? Influenced to test the rules perhaps, but be assured that the group doesn't have the power to overwrite the basic family values you have been working on. Why?
Because as you have drawn the boundaries you have maintained their respect. They know you're on their side.
You have positioned yourself in their world as a parent with deep love and strong leadership skills.
