

Chamber Chronicles

The official source of Towns County Chamber News

Wednesday January 13, 2010

Angel's Chamber Messages

Community Events

Old Fashioned Square Dance

Join us each Monday in Hiawassee, at 6 p.m. at the Senior Center (two blocks behind - south of the town square, beside the Courthouse, 48 River St.). Old Fashioned Square Dance lessons are free. This is not Western Square Dance but rather Big Circle (shew-fly, grapevine, etc.) with basic clogging demos. Help us revive this lost art, come once or every lesson. Sponsor: Towns County Historical Society, PO Box 1182, Hiawassee, GA (706) 896-1060.

2010 Friends of the Library officers

Jan Roberts, Co-Treasurer; Jan Manuszak, Co-Treasurer; Chris Thompson, Co-Recording Secretary; Maureen Gustafson, Co-Recording Secretary and Corresponding Secretary; Doris Tilly, Vice-President; Marilyn Pierce, 2010 President; Janice Cochran, Past President; and Jounida Bradley, Regional Friends of the Library Director.

Officers gear up for a productive and successful 2010 and welcome all that will to join in supporting the Towns County Friends of the Library. The meetings are at 10:30 AM on the first Tuesday in February, April, June, August, October and December at the Mountain Regional Library in Young Harris.

The first event of the year is to attend Georgia Library Day on February 25 at the Capitol in Atlanta. Legislators and other public officials will meet with the Georgia Library Media Director. TJan14.B2SH

Association and Georgia Friends of the Library to hear library issues facing the 2010 legislature. Find out more by logging on to the Georgia Library Media website or contact Donna Howell, Mountain Regional Library Director. TJan14.B2SH

TVA schedules Blue Ridge Dam repair project

TVA will lower water levels on Blue Ridge Reservoir for approximately six months beginning in July for repairs and safety upgrades to Blue Ridge Dam.

The project will bring the 79-year-old facility up to current seismic safety standards. Work will include repair and stabilization of the upstream face of the dam, stabilization of the downstream face of the dam, repairs to the penstock - the large pipe that carries water from the reservoir to the turbines in the dam - and stabilization of the tower on the upstream side of the dam that manages the intake of water.

"These repairs are necessary to continue safe operation of Blue Ridge Dam for flood control, water supply, hydroelectric power generation and recreation, both in the reservoir and in the tail waters around the dam," said Janet Herrin, TVA senior vice president for river operations. "This project should eliminate the need for future deep drawdowns for periodic inspections and will increase the safety and reliability of the dam at the same time."

The work will require that the water level in the reservoir be lowered to an elevation range between 1,620 feet and

1,630 feet for approximately six months. This will be about 48 feet below the normal winter pool and 67 feet below the average summer levels. Safe operation of the dam requires the draw down to occur slowly over a period of three to four months beginning in mid-July.

"We understand the inconvenience of the deep drawdown to the residents of Blue Ridge and have chosen a start date that will allow public use of the reservoir through part of the recreation season," said Wayne Oliver, Blue Ridge Dam rehabilitation project manager. "Lowering the levels during a period of minimum expected runoff should ensure we can maintain the low elevation required for repairs and reduce the risk of construction delays."

Oliver added that the timing also should allow TVA to take advantage of spring rains in 2011 and more quickly refill the reservoir to normal elevation. Refilling the reservoir will take approximately four to five months, depending on rainfall. TVA expects water levels to most likely return to normal in the late summer of 2011.

TVA will also close Old Georgia Highway 76 over the Blue Ridge Dam starting in mid-July for the duration of construction. This is to ensure the safety of the public and workers at the site, where large equipment will be used and materials stored. Road repairs will be made to the highway before it reopens at the completion of the project, scheduled for the end of September 2012. Alternate traffic routes will be determined by state and local authorities.

A final environmental assessment of the project is available on TVA's Web site at www.tva.gov/environment/reports/blue_ridge_dam.

Blue Ridge Dam, located in Fannin County, was completed in 1931 by Tennessee Electric Power Company and was acquired by TVA in 1939. It is 175 feet high, 950 feet wide and stretches 1,000 feet across the Toccoa River.

TVA is the nation's largest public power provider and is completely self-financing. TVA provides power to large industries and 157 power distributors that serve approximately 9 million consumers in seven southeastern states. TVA also creates economic development opportunities and manages the Tennessee River and its tributaries to provide multiple benefits, including flood damage reduction, navigation, water quality and recreation. NTJan13.A17ac

The American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

Upcoming Folk School concerts include hammered dulcimer virtuoso Ken Koldner (Thursday, January 21) and The Frogtown Four (January 29). The Folk School concert schedule is available on the world wide web at wwwfolkschool.org.

For further information, call the Folk School at 828-837-2775 or 1-800-FOLK-SCH. NTJan13.A6ac

Fiddler and folklorist Alan Jabbour will appear in concert at the John C. Campbell Folk School in Brasstown, N.C. at 7:30 p.m. on Friday, January 15. The concert is free and open to the public. Donations are welcome.

A native of Jacksonville, Florida and a classically trained violinist, Alan Jabbour

became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In 1968, the year of Henry Reed's death, Jabbour and The Hollow Rock String Band released a long-playing record, Traditional Dance Tunes, which has had a strong influence on several succeeding generations of fiddlers and banjo players.

In 1976 Alan Jabbour became the founding director

of the American Folklife Center in the Library of Congress, continuing in that position for twenty-three years before retiring from federal service in 1999. To mark his retirement, he established the Henry Reed Fund for Folk Artists, named for his mentor and dedicated to projects in support of folk artists, especially those represented in the collections of the American Folklife Center.

The documentation trips developed into an apprenticeship to master fiddler Henry Reed, who was then in his eighties. In