Cochran shines in All-Star Classic

By Jerry Kendall
Towns County Herald
Staff Writer

Gainesville - In her final prep appearance on a basketball court, Eryn Cochran displayed what made her so special to the Towns County Lady Indians for four years.

Cochran, a senior headed to Columbus State to take her game to the next level, scored 10 points and contributed 3 assists, 4 rebounds, and 4 steals while forcing 3 turnovers in her team's 74-53 All-Star victory last week.

She not only completed her high school action in fine style in an all-star game in Gainesville on Saturday, but also received prominent recognition from the Atlanta Journal and Constitution on Thursday and The Times in Gainesville on Saturday as well.

Cochran received Class A Honorable Mention All State status from the AJC last Thursday and Second Team All Area honors from The Times in Gainesville last Saturday despite missing 13 games at the start of the season due to a severe ankle injury.

In the Northeast Georgia All-Star Classic, Cochran played a prominent role in her team's 74-53 victory on Saturday in the Third Annual All-Star game at Gainesville

Reece Days at YHC

Towns County Herald
News Special

The Center for Appalachian Studies and Community Engagement at Young Harris College and the Byron Herbert Reece Farm and Heritage Center co-hosted a special "YHC Day" filled with readings, talks, and musical performances on March 22

"Our goal for the event was for YHC students, faculty and staff to be exposed to and enjoy the Farm," said Director of the CASCE and Bonner Leadership Program Coordinator Rob Campbell, Ed.D. "Though the connection between Reece and YHC is deep and significant, many on campus are not aware of Reece's life and work. The Farm is a unique asset to both the College and the larger community."

During the event, YHC alumnus, Professor Emeritus of Religion and Philosophy, and Byron Herbert Reece Society Chair John Kay, D.Min., '56, provided attendees with a brief presentation on the life and works of noted poet and YHC alumnus and former instructor Byron Herbert Reece, '40.

"The Reece Farm and Heritage Center exists to honor and perpetuate the legacy of Reece as both an Appalachian farmer and a distinguished poet and novelist," said Dr. Kay. "Our exhibits and displays are educational in nature in that they acquaint visitors with Appalachian farm life in the first half of the 20th century, as well as Reece's literary accomplishments."

Following a lunch catered by The Sawmill Place in Blairsville, GA, attendees enjoyed music by folk group Butternut Creek and Friends, featuring Professor of English Steve Harvey, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Biology Brenda Hull, Ph.D., Jennifer Cordier and Don Cordier.

The Farm serves as a teaching venue for the College's Bonner Leaders program as well as courses for YHC's Appalachian studies and com-

War stories of World War II recorded

By Mason Mitcham

For someone with Irish blood on both sides of her family, Carol Gibson comes off as mild-mannered and pleasant.

She's also quietly determined to give voice to the veterans who still have stories to tell.

On Thursday and Friday, the Witness to War Foundation, a nonprofit organization dedicated to preserving the stories and unique experiences of combat veterans, visited Towns County.

"They want the stories that you don't read in textbooks," Gibson said.

The foundation interviewed not only Bud Johnson, Phil Gamache and Todd Kimsey, local Iwo Jima survivors, but WWII survivors from all over the area, from Towns to Cherokee.

This would not have been possible without Gibson, whose efforts started the whole thing with the support of Towns County Sole Commissioner Bill Kendall.

It started unremarkably enough for Gibson. She and her husband were watching a show around New Year's that featured a piece on World War II veterans being turned away at the WWII memorial in Washington, D.C.

"That 'got my Irish up,' as my mother used to say," Gibson said, smiling. "The show that we watched had interviews that were very interesting to me, and they mentioned that the interviews were courtesy of Witness to War."

Driven by a desire to support veterans, Gibson con-

SPLOST upgrades are saving lives

By Mason Mitcham

Towns County Emergency Management Services Director Ricky Mathis is in the business of saving lives.

Sometimes that's a messy job, with plenty of room for human error. Therefore, he's grateful to be able to run the EMS and Ambulance services for Towns County with the most up-to-date equipment available.

Special Purpose Local Option Sales Tax money has recently made available upgrades for the Towns County Emergency Medical services.

The EMS ambulances are now some of the most technologically updated ambulances among the surrounding counties, which allows Towns County EMS to do its job quickly, efficiently, and with minimal loss of life.

One of these upgrades is the LUCAS device, which, despite mixed reactions from medical staff, has proved its worth in spectacular fashion.

The LUCAS Chest Compression System is a mechanical CPR system that provides safe and effective chest compression.

"We had 12 patients that received defibrillation in Towns County in 2013," Mathis said. "Out of those 12 people that we administered the LUCAS device, defibrillation, and emergency cardiac drugs, 10 out of 12 regained a pulse."

Those statistics are a notable improvement from the past.

"Saving 10 out of 12 people, that's amazing to me," Mathis said. "We have never saw statistics like that before."

However, it took a while for the LUCAS device to gain favor among the medical staff of Towns County.

When the EMS would administer the device, patients would wake up with huge bruises on their chests and ribs from the compression.

The bruises looked so odious that some nurses told the EMS staff not to use it on them; it simply looked too painful.

However, Mathis knows that CPR often demands broken ribs.

"That's just the nature of doing CPR," he said. "But people heal from broken ribs."

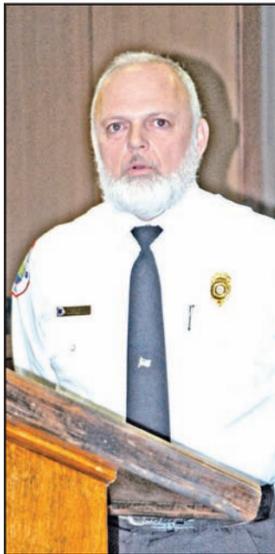

He recounted that the doctors were skeptical, too.

"They didn't know what it was," he recalled. "Now they're believers in the Lucas device as well."

One is mounted in the emergency room at the hospital, in addition to those carried by the Towns County ambulances.

Towns County Sole Commissioner Bill Kendall is pleased with the improvements SPLOST has brought.

"One of the ambulances

we bought with the SPLOST money has practically everything," he noted.

Currently, ambulances in neighboring counties, while effective, do not enjoy the technological modifications that Towns County ambulances do.

"About anything that they do in a hospital emergency room can be done in the back of our ambulance," Mathis said.

He wanted to give credit to Paramedic Ray Giles "for the many hours that he spent doing specifications" for improvements, from the new, brighter lighting to hydraulic lifts - everything the modern ambulance needs to be effective.

"Last year we ran 1,911 calls," Mathis said. "But that's not the impressive thing. Thirty percent of those calls that we ran, we didn't transport anybody. Why is that important? Well, 30 percent of the time, we played doctor."

Administering medical support, such as CPR, in the back of a racing ambulance, is no easy feat.

Although EMS teams are trained to do it, reality is often different from training.

"You had to slide around in the back of a vehicle, you learned how to lock your feet into the stretcher and sort of do CPR with one hand and hold onto the rail," Mathis recalled. "There was just no effective means to do CPR."

The improvements will help to alleviate some of that difficulty.

"We're very privileged to live here," Mathis said. "From the support that we get and the teamwork that we distribute, we're just very fortunate to live in Towns County, because what we can achieve in this county never ceases to amaze me. It's a wonderful place to live."
