the mail absolutely, positively must be delivered on time call the USMC! Yes,

Veterans' Scott Drummond USCG Veteran

that's what it took 95 years ago when on October 20, 1926, by Presidential Order, Republican President Calvin Coolidge turned to our USMC for civil duty to guard the mail. Leading up to this, on October 14 of that year a brutal mail robbery took place in Elizabeth, NJ whereas a U.Š. Mail truck driver was murdered. As per his Presidential order 2,500 fully armed Marines took up their duty to guard our mail system. Seems like when the job must be done, just call on the Marines! Those that I have met and known over the years here in our wonderful North Georgia mountain homeland certainly fit that description. They still very often continue to serve our communities in many and asunder ways the we never think of.

Marine Corps Commandant, upon anticipating this Presidential Order on October 18 directed the Commanding General, HQ, Department of the Pacific to organize a force from the 4th Regiment to be known as the Western Mail Guards, under command of Brigadier-General Smedley D. Butler. He had a long record of combat leadership, two Congressional Medals of Honor, and was a Veteran of WWI and the guerrilla wars of central America. Maybe "overqualified" as is said often today? General Smedley Butler had a very easy-going manner cloaking his cold, methodical manner to handling any task given to Marines. He was known as "Old Gimlet-Eye" to his brother Marines. The primary source for guarding the mail was the 4th Marines who were assigned to eleven states and eventually part of Texas on October 22 1926. It did NOT take long for Post Offices, mail trains and trucks to be recognized as "off limits" to bad actors due to Marine presence. Note: there was only one attempted robbery involving a mail train that was void of any mail during After it became apparent that that our U.S. Mail system had returned to normal as a result of our U.S. Marines involvement in securing our mail, the need for keeping our Marines from other duties was ended on January 10,1927. By February 18 the 4th Regiment USMC was returned to their

Sometimes, it seems that we need our USMC to secure a lot of not-so-normal operations in our America. From the top down! At any rate, Ĝod Bless our U.S. Marines and for Heaven's sake do not mess with the U.S. Mail!

Hamilton Gardens

Shawn Jarrard's recent article, 'Hamilton Gardens thanks volunteers before dissolution,' is a profound, fact-rich acknowledgment of the value and meaning of the Gardens, the amazing people who have lovingly and tirelessly tended them. and the stunning stupidity of what has occurred! Jarrard stays above the fray and focuses on appreciation for all the good that's been done there, but the underlying tragedy is palpable. I love these two quotes: "The general sentiment that evening was one of gratitude for the amount of dedication it takes to safeguard the most beautiful aspects of nature, which for the gardens has meant thousands of hours of respectful stewardship by selfless volunteers." "Public gardens are always about people. Everyone talks about the plants, about all the things that are there, but the reality is, it's people who make it happen and people who enjoy it." As a relatively recent but very enthusiastic supporter of Hamilton Gardens, I find this outcome incredibly sad. Sylvia Bell

Senators must protect our democracy and our voting rights

Dear Editor,

A recent surge of state-wide voter suppression bills and ongoing attempts to erode fair and secure elections requires federal action. Congress must act now to implement national standards for federal elections to protect our democracy. The Freedom to Vote Act would protect people's right to vote, end partisan gerrymandering, and help to eliminate the undue influence of dark money in our elections.

Sincerely, Karl Clarke

Heaters - one spark away from disaster

RC&D

It's that time of the year when we fire up the old wood heater or fireplace so we can enjoy the dancing flames, crackling of the wood burning so we can warm our backsides and toes. We don't think about the cobwebs, bird nests, and chimney fire! Wood heaters and fireplaces make the room warm and toasty but are only one escaping spark away from disaster. Wood heaters seem most dangerous but in fact seemingly safe chimney on Saturday. Saturday might be too late after our first space heaters are the deadliest of all. While only 32 percent of home heating fires involve space heaters, they are involved in 79 percent of home heating fire deaths, according to a report released by the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA). Heating equipment continues to be the second leading cause of home fires behind cooking and the second leading cause of home fire deaths behind smok-NFPA is urging caution and asking the public to practice safe heating behaviors as the peak time for home heating fires continues, and half of all home heating fires usually happen in December, January, and February. The leading factor contributing to space heater fires in general was heating equipment clothing, mattress, or bedding. Other leading factors contributing to home heater fires were failure to clean, which is principally related to creosote build-up in chimneys, and leaving an operating space heater too close to things that can burn, such as upholstered furniture,

Whether your chimney supports a wood or coal stove or just a fireplace, be sure to have it cleaned and inspected at least once a year to reduce your risk of having a fire.

Always turn off a portable space heater when you go to sleep or leave the room. In 2017, U.S. fire departments responded to 66,500 home structure fires that involved heating equipment. These fires killed 580 people, injured another 1,850, and were responsible for $608 million in direct property

NFPA offers the following safety tips. Use a sturdy, metal screen to prevent contact burns, which are even more common than flame burns. Keep things that can burn, such as paper, bedding, or furniture, at least 3 feet away from heating ognized testing laboratory.

Never use your oven for heating. Have a qualified professional install the equipment. Make sure all fuel-burning vented equipment is vented to the outside to avoid carbon monoxide poisoning. Make sure the venting for exhaust is kept clear and unobstructed. This includes removal of snow and ice around the outlet to the outside.

Install and maintain carbon monoxide alarms to avoid risk of carbon monoxide poisoning. Maintain heating equipment and chimneys by having them cleaned and inspected annually by a qualified professional. Turn portable electric heaters off when you go to bed or leave the room. Use portable space heaters with an automatic shut off so if they're tipped over they will shut off.

Plug power cords directly into outlets and never into an extension cord. Inspect for cracked or damaged, broken plugs or loose connections. Always use the proper fuel in a fuel burning heater as specified by the manufacturer. When refueling, allow the appliance to cool and refuel outside or in a well-ventilated area. When using the heater, open a window to ensure proper ventilation.

In portable kerosene or other liquid-fueled space heaters, always use the proper grade of the proper fuel. All new unvented gas-fired space heaters have an oxygen depletion sensor that detects a reduced level of oxygen in the area where the heater is operating and shuts off the heater before a hazardous level of carbon monoxide accumulates. If you have an older heater without this feature, replace it.

If the pilot light of your gas heater goes out, allow 5 minutes or more for the gas to go away before trying again, do not allow gas to accumulate, and light the match before you turn on the gas to the pilot to avoid risk of flashback. If you smell gas in your gas heater, do not attempt to light the appliance Turn off all the controls and open doors and windows. Call a gas service person. Start the fire with newspaper or kindling, never with a flammable liquid, such as lighter fluid, kerosene

Keep the doors of your wood stove closed unless loading or stoking the live fire. Allow ashes to cool before disposing. Dispose of ashes in a tightly covered metal (never plastic!) container and keep the ash container at least 10 feet away from the home and any other nearby buildings. Douse and saturate with water. Chimneys and vents need to be cleaned and inspected at least once a year by a professional.

Heaters are just "Contained Fire" trying to get out into our flammable things, and it only takes one mistake to let the fire escape into our homes. Think Safety because the home you save might be can do to try and get rid of them. Most of the time the ladybugs that move inside to hibernate through the winter are Asian ladybugs. I am often asked if the government releases ladybugs and that's why they are in their house. The US Department of Agriculture did release Asian ladybugs during the 1960s to the 1990s. Ladybugs are beneficial insects because they eat many soft-bodied insects that are pests. They were released so that apple and pecan growers would not need to use as many insecticides. Georgia is one of the states where they were released. However, now Asian ladybugs are found in states that did not have releases.

Asian Ladybugs look very similar to our native ladybugs. Females usually have several multiple spots, while the males have fewer spots. Their color can range from tan to orange to red. The best way to tell them about from our natives is that they have a dark M or W (depending on which side you look at them) on the back of their head. Asian ladybugs don't have very many natural predators in the US. That means they can spread very easily. It makes them good at controlling aphids on plants outdoors, but makes them a nuisance in the fall and early spring. In the fall, many of them will try to make their way inside. Once a couple get in, it's hard to keep more out. Ladybugs will use pheromones to let other ladybugs know that they've found a good spot to overwinter. Therefore, you usually won't see just a couple, but dozens or even hundreds. They usually will congregate on the sunny side of a building. Buildings that have light and dark contrasting colors on the outside will be more attractive to them. Older buildings are more attractive too because they will leak more heat out. Ladybugs don't injure people. They also don't reproduce indoors. They won't attack wood, food, or clothing. They can secrete a yellow substance when disturbed. The yellow secretion smells bad and can stain. They use the yellow stuff as a defense mechanism against predators.

So the big question is, how do you get rid of them? If they are inside a simple method is to just vacuum them up and then throw them in the trash. Sealing cracks around doors or windows is a good way to keep them from entering in the first place. Ladybugs are small, so they can use a crack that's 1/8th of an inch. There are ladybug traps that use black light to attract them. These can be effective at capturing ones that have already entered, especially if you use it in a dark space, like a closet or attic. If you have a serious infestation, it's best to call Ladybugs can be a nuisance inside the house, but remember that they are beneficial to farmers and gardeners. If you have questions about ladybugs contact your County Extension Office or email me at Jacob.Williams@uga.edu.

An Orange for Christmas

Have you heard? Christmas is ruined this year. At least that's what they say. How can this be? Well, it has something to do with supply chains, they say. The pandemic decimated the work force, and worldoutsidethebox.com people were cooped up at home

Outside The Box By: Don Perry

for months on end. Then the government handed out a few $trillion in free money, and folks are intent on spending it. Demand came roaring back and supply can't keep up.

To make matters worse, there is a log jam of container ships at the biggest ports around the world, also sick dock workers, new regulations, and a full blown energy crisis in Europe and Asia. It's a perfect storm for ruining Christmas, they say. 'That's not what Christmas is about," said many of our friends and associates when they heard the "news," and they were exactly right. But let's go with the official narrative for the moment and pretend that Christmas is actually Giftmas, or Spendmas instead of what it truly is. Would it still be ruined?

Perhaps not. It's not as if all the stores are empty of goods. There is still plenty of "stuff" out there to spend our money on. Is it ruinous if our online order of the latest new and improved trending item that the advertisers tell us is popular this year, does not arrive by December 25th? Is it a national emergency if, instead of getting to select from 12 different colors and 32 accessories for our needful thing, there may only be a handful to choose from? Are Executive Orders required if we are in danger of being forced to use last year's decorations instead of filling up the cart with the latest imported glitter-encrusted Styrofoam from China? By the way, Mr. President, the ports are already operating around the clock, but thanks for the reassuring words.

If we're still intent on spending, perhaps there are other options. The gift of spending time with the people we care about is still in plentiful supply. There is abundant time left to make a gift, prepare a meal, or lend a helping hand for Christmas.

In fact, when we disconnect from the crisis promoted in advance by government and media, and pause for a moment to consider the problem, it becomes readily apparent that this predicted disaster is largely a matter of perspective.

There was a story my father liked to tell of a Christmas when he was a child during the Great Depression. It is a story that will sound familiar to many in our area who remember the stories of their ancestors. There wasn't a lot of money left over that year after the taxes, the doctor and the short list of essentials that the family could not barter or make themselves. On this particular holiday, each of the five children received one bright, fresh and perfect orange as their Christmas gift.

An orange was a rare delicacy in the remote coves of the Southern Appalachians in those days, and its acquisition required not inconsiderable expense and trouble, and a 25 mile round trip to town and back in a wagon for my grandfather.

Not one child complained. Even Dad, the youngest of the clan, knew the sacrifice that simple gift represented, and a lifetime later, after many Christmases of prosperity and abundance, it was the gift of the orange he cherished the most.

The Grinch didn't steal our Christmas; we sold it to him, and if anyone has spent a single moment in disquietude or trepidation over the predicted demise of Christmas this year, perhaps a bit of chagrin might be instructive to the soul. Shame on us if we allow ourselves to be herded into the next so called crisis to grieve over the unrealized loss of something we don't need anyhow.

And if you're wondering what to get me for Christmas this year, I'd like an orange, please.
